Melksham Without Neighbourhood Plan - Monuments Report

Monument Number	Site Name	Record Type
ST86NE304 - MWI1687	Roman Road	Monument

Romano-British road from Bath to Speen, part of which was excavated in 1939.

Monument Types and Dates

ROAD (Roman - 43 AD to 409 AD)

Description and Sources

Description - None recorded

<1> Ordnance Survey, Ordnance Survey 6 inch Map (Map). SWI9566.
Roman road from Bath to Speen. Agger just visible in some places but very eroded. Non-existent in others.

<2> Environment Agency, 2005, Lidar, LIDAR SU0968 ENVIRONMENT AGENCY 03-MAY-2006: ST9466 DSM; SD96NW DTM; ST9167 DSM; ST9267 DSM (Aerial Photograph). SWI26451.

The earthwork remains of the Roman Road from Wickham to Batheaston can be on lidar images running west to east through the parishes of Lacock, Melksham Without, and Bromham. It is visible as either a bank, or on the slopes as a hollow way. The remains are fragmentary and the course of the road across Bowden Hill has been obscured due to natural slumping. The most uninterrupted line of the road in this area is centred at ST 9341 6734, where the earthworks of the road appear as a hollow way as the gradient increases heading east. This is visible for c.450 metres with earthwork banks of the road at either end. The earthworks are not visible again to the east for another c.780 metres where natural slumping has obscured the course of the road, after which additional hollows and banks are visible on the assumed course of the road centred at ST 9484 6745.

<3> English Heritage, NMR Aerial Photograph, OS/88005 34 04-MAR-1988;

EH 27595/016 6-SEP-2012 (Aerial Photograph). SWI9475.

Air photos taken in 1988 show what may be the slight earthwork remains of three separate lengths of the road within Neston Park. Air photos taken in 2009 suggest that the most westerly of these earthworks may still survive. The parkland that contains the central section has been ploughed and appears levelled, although two trees planted on the bank almost at opposite ends survive and may preserve the earthwork at those points. Only part of the third section is depicted by the Ordnance Survey and the eastern continuation suggested by the air photos may actually be the result of the line of the Roman road being used as a field and parish boundary.

<4> Sabin, D. + Donaldson, K., 2013, Wick Farm, Heddington Wick, Wiltshire (Report). SWI27052.
Part of the Roman road running through Wick Farm identified by a geophysical survey.

Visible as earthwork forming a field boundary at ST88776701. Shaw Mellor sectioned road in 1939.

<6> Devizes Museum; Mellor, A Shaw, Devizes Museum Box 20 Shaw Mellor Papers in the Annexe (Unassigned). SWI6896.

<7> Mason, C., 2015, Melksham to Thingley Cable Installation, Wiltshire (Report). SWI27737.
A section of the road was found by an excavation.

<8> Clarke, B., 2016, Excavation and Fieldwork in Wiltshire 2015 (Article in serial). SWI27769.

<9> Last, J., Carpenter, E. + Evans, S., 2016, West Wiltshire National Archaeological Identification Survey Lowland Pilot Project Report (Report). SWI27877.

Wansdyke is usually considered to have formed a barrier between British and Anglo-Saxon areas in the C6 & C7. To what extent the stretch of Roman road in its vicinity was reconfigured to serve as part of a defensive earthwork remains unclear. However, at Wick Farm to the east of Verlucio, recent geophysical survey has suggested the extant bank is the later Wansdyke, with the line of the Roman road running 10m to the south of this. Part of the Roman road in Neston Park, which was well preserved in the early 19th century (Colt Hoare), now lacks a substantial earthwork presence.

<10> McConnell, R., 2017, Land to the south of Broads Green Farm, Broads Green, Heddington, Calne, Wiltshire (Report). SWI27540.

<11> Mason, C., 2018, A Romano-British Roadside Settlement at Beanacre, Wiltshire (Monograph). SWI28334.
The excavation site lies along the line of the road between the Roman towns of Aquae Sulis (Bath) and Cunetio (Mildenhall). The line of this road is defined by extant hedge boundaries and cropmarks that extend for several kilometres to the east and west of the site.

Medieval or post medieval settlement earthworks and ridge and furrow are visible at Whitley on historic air photos and 2005 lidar. A building platform was seen on 1946 aerial photographs. Associated with this were a series of ditches and some ridge and furrow. All of these earthworks have since been levelled and the area is now built upon covered by Grange Close, Brookfield Rise and Eden Grove. On the north side of Top Lane are the earthworks of three house platforms visible on lidar. Associated with these are a series of hollow ways, ditches, a further possible house platform and ridge and furrow. Other ridge and furrow levelled since 1946 extended north-east up to and along the southern side of the Roman road which marks the parish boundary. Ridge and furrow and associated banks at ditches was situated to the west along the north side of Whitley. This has been largely levelled, although some slight earthworks can still be seen on lidar.

<5> Environment Agency, 2005, Lidar, LIDAR ST8866 ST8867 ST8966 ST8967 DSM 02-16-APR-2005 (Aerial Photograph). SWI26451.

<6> Last, J., Carpenter, E. + Evans, S., 2016, West Wiltshire National Archaeological Identification Survey Lowland Pilot Project Report (Report). SWI27877.

Earthworks represent a shrunken medieval village, adjacent to the extant settlement.

A Bronze Age round barrow cemetery, comprising seven ring ditches, is visible as cropmarks on air photographs. The ring ditches are intermittently visible with diameters measuring between 19 metres and 37 metres. The largest of the barrows has a break in the ring ditch to the north-west. Another appears to be truncated by a later Iron Age/Roman rectilinear enclosure. Another of the ring ditches has an internal sinuous ditch, but it is uncertain whether this is associated or not.

<6> Historic England, 2017, Case Name: West Wiltshire NAIS: barrow cemetery at Boundary Farm (Unpublished document). SWI27687.

Aerial photographs taken in August 1990 show a series of circular crop marks (centred on ST) to the north-west and west of Boundary Farm which represent the buried remains of a round barrow cemetery of probable Bronze Age date. Analysis of more recent (July 2013) aerial photographs has revealed that the site extends further north and east than was previously known. The main period of round barrow construction occurred in the Early Bronze Age between about 2200-1500BC (a period when cremation succeeded inhumation as the primary burial rite), although Neolithic examples are known from as early as 3000BC. In general, round barrows comprise a rounded earthen mound or stone cairn, the earthen examples usually having a surrounding ditch and occasionally an outer bank. They range greatly in size from just 5m in diameter to as much as 40m, with the mounds ranging from slight rises to as much as 4m in height. They occur either in isolation or grouped as cemeteries and often acted as a focus for burials in later periods. Barrow cemeteries comprise closely-spaced groups of up to 30 round barrows. Most cemeteries developed over a considerable period of time, often many centuries, and in some cases acted as a focus for burials as late as the early medieval period. Round barrow cemeteries occur across most of lowland Britain, with a marked concentration in Wessex. Barrows can occur anywhere within the landscape and levelled examples occur in river valleys, as is the case with the cemetery to the north-west and west of Boundary Farm, which is sited on the gravel terraces of the River Avon.

PRINCIPAL ELEMENTS

The monument includes a barrow cemetery seen as ring ditches visible as crop marks on aerial photographs and most likely dates from the Bronze Age period. The crop marks of a later enclosure are also visible. The site is located on terrace sands and gravels to the east of the River Avon.

DESCRIPTION

The barrow cemetery comprises a group of seven ring ditches laid out on an approximate north-east-south-west alignment. The ditches range from 19m to 37m in diameter, and have been under plough for many years; hence the barrows are no longer visible as earthworks. The largest one, situated towards the north end of the site, has a break in the ring ditch, while the south-west ring ditch has an internal sinuous ditch, but it is uncertain whether this is associated or not. One of the other ring ditches appears to have been truncated by a later Iron Age/Roman rectilinear enclosure which is also visible on aerial photographs. It has maximum visible dimensions of 41m by 61m and appears to be associated with several distinct linear crop marks running north-west-south-east. There are other miscellaneous crop marks in the area beyond Boundary Farm; those to the north-west have been interpreted as part of a possible rectilinear boundary or enclosure ditch and a possible pit alignment following a magnetometer survey (Archaeological Surveys Ltd) in 2015.

<7> Historic England, 2017, Case Name: West Wiltshire NAIS: barrow cemetery at Boundary Farm (Unpublished document). SWI27687.

The site to the north-west and west of Boundary Farm has been levelled as a result of intensive ploughing over many years and has also been subject to sub-soiling. Although the ring ditches are visible on aerial photographs, on the basis of the current information it is not possible to ascertain to what extent these features have been damaged or removed by farming practices and whether the crop marks represent only the basal deposits of much truncated ditches. It is possible that the site may retain buried remains relating to the individual barrows and perhaps even the primary burial beneath each of the mounds, but not enough is presently understood about the extent of survival and significance of this barrow cemetery to fully evaluate its national importance at this time. Beyond the cemetery are a number of more ephemeral crop marks which appear to be isolated features which are also not considered to be nationally important. Scheduling cannot, therefore, be recommended for the barrow cemetery at Boundary Farm at the present time and it should be managed according to the government's advice on the historic environment in the National Planning Policy Framework. However, it were to be the subject of geophysical survey or targeted, small-scale excavation at a future date which could demonstrate its potential national importance then a re-assessment for designation may be justified.

A Bronze Age round barrow cemetery, comprising seven ring ditches, is visible as cropmarks on air photographs. The ring ditches are intermittently visible with diameters measuring between 19 metres and 37 metres. The largest of the barrows has a break in the ring ditch to the north-west. Another appears to be truncated by a later Iron Age/Roman rectilinear enclosure. Another of the ring ditches has an internal sinuous ditch, but it is uncertain whether this is associated or not.

<6> Historic England, 2017, Case Name: West Wiltshire NAIS: barrow cemetery at Boundary Farm (Unpublished document). SWI27687.

Aerial photographs taken in August 1990 show a series of circular crop marks (centred on ST) to the north-west and west of Boundary Farm which represent the buried remains of a round barrow cemetery of probable Bronze Age date. Analysis of more recent (July 2013) aerial photographs has revealed that the site extends further north and east than was previously known. The main period of round barrow construction occurred in the Early Bronze Age between about 2200-1500BC (a period when cremation succeeded inhumation as the primary burial rite), although Neolithic examples are known from as early as 3000BC. In general, round barrows comprise a rounded earthen mound or stone cairn, the earthen examples usually having a surrounding ditch and occasionally an outer bank. They range greatly in size from just 5m in diameter to as much as 40m, with the mounds ranging from slight rises to as much as 4m in height. They occur either in isolation or grouped as cemeteries and often acted as a focus for burials in later periods. Barrow cemeteries comprise closely-spaced groups of up to 30 round barrows. Most cemeteries developed over a considerable period of time, often many centuries, and in some cases acted as a focus for burials as late as the early medieval period. Round barrow cemeteries occur across most of lowland Britain, with a marked concentration in Wessex. Barrows can occur anywhere within the landscape and levelled examples occur in river valleys, as is the case with the cemetery to the north-west and west of Boundary Farm, which is sited on the gravel terraces of the River Avon.

PRINCIPAL ELEMENTS

The monument includes a barrow cemetery seen as ring ditches visible as crop marks on aerial photographs and most likely dates from the Bronze Age period. The crop marks of a later enclosure are also visible. The site is located on terrace sands and gravels to the east of the River Avon.

DESCRIPTION

The barrow cemetery comprises a group of seven ring ditches laid out on an approximate north-east-south-west alignment. The ditches range from 19m to 37m in diameter, and have been under plough for many years; hence the barrows are no longer visible as earthworks. The largest one, situated towards the north end of the site, has a break in the ring ditch, while the south-west ring ditch has an internal sinuous ditch, but it is uncertain whether this is associated or not. One of the other ring ditches appears to have been truncated by a later Iron Age/Roman rectilinear enclosure which is also visible on aerial photographs. It has maximum visible dimensions of 41m by 61m and appears to be associated with several distinct linear crop marks running north-west-south-east. There are other miscellaneous crop marks in the area beyond Boundary Farm; those to the north-west have been interpreted as part of a possible rectilinear boundary or enclosure ditch and a possible pit alignment following a magnetometer survey (Archaeological Surveys Ltd) in 2015.

<7> Historic England, 2017, Case Name: West Wiltshire NAIS: barrow cemetery at Boundary Farm (Unpublished document). SWI27687.

The site to the north-west and west of Boundary Farm has been levelled as a result of intensive ploughing over many years and has also been subject to sub-soiling. Although the ring ditches are visible on aerial photographs, on the basis of the current information it is not possible to ascertain to what extent these features have been damaged or removed by farming practices and whether the crop marks represent only the basal deposits of much truncated ditches. It is possible that the site may retain buried remains relating to the individual barrows and perhaps even the primary burial beneath each of the mounds, but not enough is presently understood about the extent of survival and significance of this barrow cemetery to fully evaluate its national importance at this time. Beyond the cemetery are a number of more ephemeral crop marks which appear to be isolated features which are also not considered to be nationally important. Scheduling cannot, therefore, be recommended for the barrow cemetery at Boundary Farm at the present time and it should be managed according to the government's advice on the historic environment in the National Planning Policy Framework. However, it were to be the subject of geophysical survey or targeted, small-scale excavation at a future date which could demonstrate its potential national importance then a re-assessment for designation may be justified.

A medieval settlement, probably Snarlton, is visible as earthworks on air photographs and lidar. The settlement comprises building platforms, hollow ways, field boundaries, a possible pond, ridge and furrow and plough headlands. The settlement extends along the south side of Brown's Lane with a series of divisions defining crofts. A series of short sinuous ditches are visible to the north of the lane, extending the full length of the settlement, and are clearly associated, but it is not certain whether they are trackways or remnants of further plots. The accuracy of some of the mapping of this settlement for the West Wiltshire NAIS Project was decreased due a lack of suitable control points on the source photograph. Many elements appear to be no longer extant on the latest 2005 lidar and 2008 vertical photography.

<6> Last, J., Carpenter, E. + Evans, S., 2016, West Wiltshire National Archaeological Identification Survey Lowland Pilot Project Report (Report). SWI27877.
Recent excavations directly to the west of Snarlton Farm have revealed evidence of earlier activity, comprising a small settlement and an iron production site of the 12th to 14th centuries. The availability of timber from Melksham forest and iron ore from nearby Seend no doubt explains the location of the site, though the reason for its demise is less clear. Roadside properties were more closely spaced, creating linear settlement, such as at Snarlton Row. Earthworks to the east of this indicate the abandonment of a more dispersed settlement along the same lane, once collectively known as Moor Lane.

The medieval settlement of Redstocks and associated field system are visible as earthworks on air photographs and lidar. The settlement comprises numerous building platforms, hollow ways, field boundaries, ponds, ridge and furrow and plough headlands. An extensive field system extends to the west and south-west. Most elements are extant on the latest 2005 lidar and 2008 vertical photography. On the outskirts of the field system a field boundary appears to truncate a large enclosure of possible later prehistoric/Roman date.

<8> Last, J., Carpenter, E. + Evans, S., 2016, West Wiltshire National Archaeological Identification Survey Lowland Pilot Project Report (Report). SWI27877.

The earthworks of perhaps a single property and associated field boundaries can be seen within an area of dispersed settlement. Medieval settlement reorganisation, perhaps associated with disafforestation of the area.

A deer park was recorded here in 1605, probably an earlier park acquired by the Bayntuns after the Civil War.

<2> English Heritage, 2004, Register of Parks and Gardens of Special Historic Interest in England - Spye Park (Scheduling record). SWI22341.

A landscaped park, listed in the Register of Parks and Gardens of Special Interest 30/11/2004. The garden originally had an Italian cascade, with falls of water over steps with about 30 or 40 ft fall. The original 17th century house was demolished in 1868 and a new house built slightly behind the site of the old house during 1863-8. All that remains of the house is the entrance porch and the house platform. A new shrubbery was planted on the steeply sloping ground near the site of the old house and an extensive walled garden was built near Chittoe in 1876. Since the late 19th century there have been minor additions to the pleasure grounds but few alterations have been made in the park. In the 1990s the 19th century house was demolished as a result of fire damage and the former stables were subsequently converted into the main residence. The park is c315ha as registered with boundaries marked by a mixture of fences and walls. Three drives lead through the park to the site of the house, one from the north-west, one from the north-east and the third for the south. An early 16th century Tudor gatehouse, Spye Arch is situated c1km north-west of the site of the house, and had originally been built for Bromham House and moved to Spye Park in the late 18th century. The main drive is lined by an avenue of 18th or early 19th century lime trees and horse chestnuts, with additional mature sycamore. To the south-west of the house is an extensive lawn lined by trees within the pleasure grounds. There is a long grass terrace on a platform and faced with stone, at the south-east end of which is a stone loggia or gazebo, with glazed sides and an open front on four pillars. To the north-east of the loggia is a partly walled flower garden. There is a raised circular area planted with 18th century lime trees. A narrow canal is situated on the lawn with a covered seat. A large roughly circular feature, possibly an early 20th century croquet lawn, consists of an area of grass surrounded by a slightly raised mound. The south-west end of the lawn terminates at a steep slope which acts as a ha-ha. An extensive walled garden is situated c500m south-east of the former house site, with red-brick walls and a Garden Lodge built in 1876.

An example of 18th- and 19th-century gardens and designed landscapes; parkland is a distinctive feature of this part of Wiltshire. Spye Park was created out of Pewsham Forest in the early 17th century, but has few remains visible from the air, though this is probably due to the extensive tree cover. Features seen include slight earthworks of undated field systems and an enclosure, as well as the scheduled remains of a stretch of the Roman road

A survey by Graham Brown in 1995 revealed Medieval landscape features, including some vague house platforms and a pond which appears to overlie ridge and furrow.

The earthworks of medieval or post medieval ridge and furrow and field boundary ditches can be seen as earthworks on 2005 lidar and air photos taken in 1946 and 1962. These field remains are situated to the west of Beanacre. All these field boundaries had fallen out of use by 1886 and are not depicted on the Ordnance Survey map, although many seem to relate to boundaries in use at that date. This group is also cut by a railway line (originally the Wiltshire, Somerset and Weymouth Railway built in the 1840s. Lidar taken in 2005 show the features between Beanacre and the railway line still as earthworks as is a small area beyond the line to the southwest; though the remainder of this area has been lost under the Electricity Sub Station. A small area to the north-west has also been levelled. This field systems continues to the south-west.

Medieval or post medieval settlement earthworks, field boundaries and ridge and furrow in Beanacre can be seen on lidar taken in 2005. These earthworks are situated on the eastern side of the village near Upper Beanacre Farm. Building platforms and possible hollow ways are closest to the road with the ridge and furrow further east. The earthworks at the northern end include a possible pathway or boundary which cuts one of the blocks of ridge and furrow. Air photos taken in 1998 suggest that some earthworks may continue in to the field to the south.

<10> Last, J., Carpenter, E. + Evans, S., 2016, West Wiltshire National Archaeological Identification Survey Lowland Pilot Project Report (Report). SWI27877.

Earthworks represent a shrunken medieval village, adjacent to the extant settlement.

Small roughly square earthwork with a low bank situated on gravel terrace. Two possible entrances on NE and SW seem to post-date the Roman road.

<2> Ordnance Survey, 1968, Fieldwork Ordnance Survey 1968 (Fieldwork). SWI14002.

<3> Environment Agency, 2005, Lidar, LIDAR ST9267 DSM 02-16-APR-2005 (Aerial Photograph). SWI26451.

The slight earthwork remains of the enclosure could be seen abutting the southern side of the agger of the Roman road from Bath to Speen, just east of the roads crossing point of the River Avon. The enclosure is sub-circular, measuring approximately 50 metres across. It is not clear what the relationship is between the road and the enclosure, remains which could be seen as earthworks on lidar images.

Description - None recorded

<1> Priddle, Rod, 2004, Wings Over Wiltshire, An Aeronautical History of Wiltshire (Bibliographic reference). SWI22354. RAF Melksham opened on 12/06/1940 as No 12 School of Technical Training. It had 8 hangars, a hospital, and an infrastructure similar to that of an airfield, but was seldom in use as an airfield although it is sometimes referred to as such. It was used for training Instrument Repairers, Armourers, Cooks, Bomb Disposal, Spraking Plug Testers, WAAF Parachute Packers, Electricians, Air Mechanic Naval Ratings, Dingy Packers, recruits and numerous others. It closed on 26/02/1965. The hangars remain in use for commercial purposes and the gymnasium as a sports centre. Most of the building have disappeared and the Officers' Married Quarters have been sold off. A Portland Stone memorial stands outside the original gymnasium of RAF Melksham. (Now Christie-Miller Sports Centre in Lancaster Road).

<2> County Archaeology Service, Chippenham, AER 1057-1064 (Aerial Photograph). SWI26657.

<3> Royal Air Force, 1940-50s, Royal Air Force Aerial Photography (Aerial Photograph). SWI26099. The extensive Second World War and later military camp, RAF Melksham, is visible as buildings, structures and earthworks on air photographs. The station was opened for training purposes in July 1940 and remained operational in 1965. The nucleated camp comprises hundreds of military buildings with associated air raid shelters and emergency water supply tanks, served by a network of roads. A number of small outlying camps are situated around Berryfield to the west and have been recorded separately. Most of the area of the camp has been redeveloped into modern housing and an industrial estate, but most of the larger buildings on the west of the camp, including the gymnasium, remain extant, as does the sewage works which served the camp.

Description and Sources

Description - None recorded

<1> Oxford Archaeological Unit, 2005, Cotswold Water Park: Interpreting the Historic Environment, p39 (Report). SWI24974. The Thames and Severn Canal has a junction with the Wiltshire and Berkshire branch of the Wiltshire and Berkshire Canal at Latton, giving access to Swindon and thence to the Kennet and Avon Canal at Semington. Both canals fell into disuse with the coming of the Great Western Railway in 1841. There are fragments surviving at Westleaze near Swindon and at Pewsham near Chippenham.

A restoration and management plan is being devised.

<2> Dalby, L.J., 1971, The Wiltshire & Berks Canal (Monograph). SWI15647.

The former Wiltshire and Berkshire Canal passed through Melksham town southeast of the Market Place. It was authorised in 1795 and during the 19th century carried considerable traffic. After the arrival of the railway, canal traffic dwindled and it was finally closed in 1910. The course of the canal through Melksham town has been completely filled in, and the line of its course, although preserved in places by property boundaries, is disappearing under new developments.

<3> Pugh, R. B. + Crittall, E. (ed.), 1953, The Victoria History of the Counties of England: A History of Wiltshire, P.93 (Serial). SWI12740.

<5> Kenyon, D. + Morton, R., 2006, Hawksworth, Swindon, Wiltshire, P.9 (Report). SWI25120.

The proposed route of the canal at Swindon (Hawksworth), is depicted on a map dating from 1812, though construction was not completed until April 1819. The line of the canal, and a bridge crossing it are depicted on the Tithe Map of 1841. This section of the canal is currently in use as a cycle track.

<6> Chadwick, P., 1999, Land at Hunts Mill Farm, Wootton Bassett, P.12 (Report). SWI24221.

The Wilts and Berks Canal was constructed in 1801-4.

<7> Roberts, S. + Elliott, L., 2006, Land East of Swindon, Wiltshire, Geophysical Surveys, Area G (Report). SWI25707.

A section of the canal was detected through geophysical survey at Lower Stratton.

<8> Attwood, G., 2008, Land East of Swindon, Wiltshire, Geophysical Surveys - Phases 2 and 3, Area 4, Feature 36 (Report). SWI26097.

Another section of the canal was detected by further geophysical survey at Lock Cottage. Several concentrations of anomalies were detected adjacent to the canal, which may indicate features associated with the waterway.

<9> Bartlett, A. D. H., 2013, The Hub, Swindon, Wiltshire (Report). SWI26346.

Part of the bank of the canal, south of South Marston Farm, was identified through geophysical survey.

<11> Jones, P., 2018, Proposed redevelopment of land at Withleigh House, Spa Road, Melksham, Wiltshire (Report). SWI28166.

RIDGE AND FURROW (Medieval - 1066 AD to 1539 AD)

Evidence EXCAVATED FEATURE

Description and Sources

Description

An area of ridge and furrow was located directly beneath the topsoil during groundworks. Excavation of a section across the ridge and furrow revealed that the furrows were aligned approximately north/south and were between 0.1 metre deep at their western end and extended to a depth of 0.4 metres at their eastern end. The furrows were separated by ridges spaced c.6 metres apart. (1)

<1> Burge, T., 2012, GHQ Line Defences (2011/12), P.5 (Unpublished document). SWI26081.

A Type 28a pillbox is located west of Semington.

<2> English Heritage, 1995-2001, Defence of Britain Project, DoB Anti Invasion Database UID - S0008679 (Survey). SWI26098.

Second World War concrete Type 28a anti-tank gun emplacement situated at Outmarsh Farm in Semington.

A main feature of the defences at Semington are the number of massive two chamber type 28a anti tank gun emplacements. They were constructed of wood, brick and breeze block shuttering.

Semington was a nodal point and part of the GHQ defences. It was well defended and an important strongpoint on the western flank of GHQ Line Blue.

<3> Last, J., Carpenter, E. + Evans, S., 2016, West Wiltshire National Archaeological Identification Survey Lowland Pilot Project Report (Report). SWI27877.

Second World War defences can be seen to the south-west of Melksham, along the southern bank of the Avon, in Whaddon and at strategic points along the Kennet and Avon canal. These include pillboxes and road blocks, some of which survive. The defences were part of the anti-invasion GHQ Line Green and GHQ Line Blue and formed the Whaddon Defence Area.

A Type 28a pillbox is located east of Whaddon Grove Farm.

<2> English Heritage, 1995-2001, Defence of Britain Project, DoB Anti Invasion Database UID - S0008689 (Survey). SWI26098.

Type 28a anti-tank gun emplacement, with brick shuttering, situated north of Semington Brook. This pillbox was part of the Whaddon World War II defence area. There are three foci of this defence area, the two waterways of the Semington Brook and the Kennet and Avon Canal, the village of Semington itself and two farms at Whaddon. The waterways provide a link between the two areas.

The defence area consists partly of the GHQ Line Green defences and those of GHQ Line Blue, the junction between the two being at Whaddon. GHQ Line Green formed a loop around the Bristol area and served as the outer defence against attack from the south. GHQ Line Blue beginning at Whaddon, largely followed the line of the Kennet and Avon Canal to a point just west of Reading. It was surveyed in July 1940 by V corps and became the responsibility of the Salisbury Plain Area Command. Both Lines were fortified with a variety of measures such as pillboxes, anti tank obstacles and road blocks. Bridges and crossing points were also destroyed to hinder enemy advancement.

A Second World War anti-tank gun emplacement is visible as a structure on air photographs. It is not possible to determine the latest evidence for the feature due to dense tree cover on the latest 2008 vertical photography.

<4> Last, J., Carpenter, E. + Evans, S., 2016, West Wiltshire National Archaeological Identification Survey Lowland Pilot Project Report (Report). SWI27877.

Second World War defences can be seen to the south-west of Melksham, along the southern bank of the Avon, in Whaddon and at strategic points along the Kennet and Avon canal. These include pillboxes and road blocks, some of which survive. The defences were part of the anti-invasion GHQ Line Green and GHQ Line Blue and formed the Whaddon Defence Area.

<2> English Heritage, 1995-2001, Defence of Britain Project (Survey). SWI26098.
There is no outside protective wall for the entrance of the Type 22 pillbox. There is an internal anti-ricochet wall. The inside is very wet, with water standing to a depth of two feet and weed and plant growth. The interior is plastered up to approximately three feet from the ground. The doorway has one step up and five down into the pillbox. The pillbox is located to the east of the railway line in a field, where three footpaths meet by a crossing of the railway line.

This Second World War pillbox is visible on aerial photographs taken in 1945. This pillbox was one of four that were built to protect the military Beanacre Sidings. It is centred at ST 9001 6617 with the sidings to the west and a curving line of barbed wire to the east and close to a footbridge across the sidings. The pillbox was still visible on air photos taken in 2009.

A possible Type 22 pillbox is now just a pile of bricks. A man living nearby told the recorder it had been a pillbox and had been demolished within the last few years. It is located approximately 60 yards south of the road bridge (on the unclassified road from Beanacre to Whitley) over the railway line, to the east of, but adjacent to the single track line.

<1> English Heritage, 1995-2001, Defence of Britain Project, DoB Anti Invasion Database UID - S0000200 (Survey). SWI26098.

A Second World War concrete and brick Type 22 pillbox, with Y-shape internal blast wall, is situated to the north west of Whaddon Grove Farm, on the embankment of an old railway line. This pillbox is part of the Whaddon World War II defence area.

There are three foci of this defence area, the two waterways of the Semington Brook and the Kennet and Avon Canal, the village of Semington itself and two farms at Whaddon. The waterways provide a link between the two areas.

The defence area consists partly of the GHQ Line Green defences and those of GHQ Line Blue, the junction between the two being at Whaddon. GHQ Line Green formed a loop around the Bristol area and served as the outer defence against attack from the south. GHQ Line Blue beginning at Whaddon, largely followed the line of the Kennet and Avon Canal to a point just west of Reading. It was surveyed in July 1940 by V corps and became the responsibility of the Salisbury Plain Area Command. Both Lines were fortified with a variety of measures such as pillboxes, anti tank obstacles and road blocks. Bridges and crossing points were also destroyed to hinder enemy advancement.

Second World War defences can be seen to the south-west of Melksham, along the southern bank of the Avon, in Whaddon and at strategic points along the Kennet and Avon canal. These include pillboxes and road blocks, some of which survive. The defences were part of the anti-invasion GHQ Line Green and GHQ Line Blue and formed the Whaddon Defence Area.

Possible site of a pillbox on north bank of the Semington Brook.

This pillbox would have been part of the Whaddon World War II defence area. There are three foci of this defence area, the two waterways of the Semington Brook and the Kennet and Avon Canal, the village of Semington itself and two farms at Whaddon. The waterways provide a link between the two areas.

Four anti-tank blocks are visible as structures on air photographs. The blocks are set as two at either end of a small bridge across the Semington Brook. They are on the site of a supposed pillbox, which was not evident on air photographs and is thought to have been confused with another form of defence, as were others in the area. The bridge-block lies between the two defensive points of Whaddon and Semington and is surrounded by numerous additional defences which have been recorded separately. No surface features are visible on the latest 2008 vertical photography.

Several former field boundaries were identified through geophysical survey. The nature of the former boundaries infers that the field system may have differed, as several boundaries do not respect the current field's borders.

Description and Sources

Description - None recorded

<1> Dickinson, C., 2014, Melksham Town FC (Report). SWI26670.

Pit-like features, and linear and curvilinear features were revealed through geophysical survey. Evaluation revealed linear ditches, gullies, pits and/or postholes associated with Romano-British finds, indicative of a settlement or farmstead. The discovery of roofing and box flue tile also allude to a high-status Roman building in the area. It was difficult to determine whether these were archaeological in origin.

<2> Last, J., Carpenter, E. + Evans, S., 2016, West Wiltshire National Archaeological Identification Survey Lowland Pilot Project Report (Report). SWI27877.

An evaluation recorded a possible small Roman farmstead, which could not be more precisely dated.

<3> Powell, A.B., 2018, Romano-British edge-of-settlement activity and landscape organisation, north of Bath Road, Melksham (Article in serial). SWI28448.

20% of the excavation area was covered by the remnants of medieval/post medieval ridge and furrow aligned NNE-SSW. All other features were Romano-British, and included ditches, curved gullies, pits, postholes and ovens, indicating a Romano-British settlement and agricultural activity. A group of roughly concentric, but irregular and intercutting lengths of curved gully suggested some focus of activity. A group of six ovens, three bounded by the gullies, and three to the N, were found.

Description

Woolmore Farm, Melksham Without. Partially extant 17th century farmstead of regular courtyard plan. The farm buildings are dispersed across multiple yards with additional detached elements to the main plan. The farmhouse is set away from the yard. Isolated location. Large modern sheds have been identified on the site of the farmstead, and may have destroyed or obscured historic buildings. There has been a partial loss (less than 50%) of traditional buildings. A Bronze Age round barrow cemetery, comprising seven ring ditches, is visible as cropmarks on air photographs. The ring ditches are intermittently visible with diameters measuring between 19 metres and 37 metres. The largest of the barrows has a break in the ring ditch to the northwest. Another appears to be truncated by a later Iron Age/Roman rectilinear enclosure. Another of the ring ditches has an internal sinuous ditch, but it is uncertain whether this is associated or not.

A group of medieval or post medieval boundary banks and ditches to the southwest of Upper Selves Wood are visible as earthworks on lidar and RAF photographs. These inter-cutting earthworks are thought to be field boundaries, suggesting several phases of cultivation in the area. It is possible that some of the ditches functioned as drains. The earthworks are surrounded by further evidence of agricultural activity, in the form of fields of ridge and furrow and additional earthwork banks and ditches.

Description and Sources

Description - None recorded

<1> Environment Agency, 2005, Lidar, LIDAR ST9366 DSM MAR-APR-2005 (Aerial Photograph). SWI26451.

The slight earthwork remains of a possible post medieval catchwork water meadow are visible on lidar. This is situated to the north of Rhotteridge Farm. At the northern extent of what is visible of the water meadow is a flood dyke, situated on a contour, and possibly leading from a nearby stream to the northeast. Water from this dyke would overflow down slope to the northwest, where the water would then drain into, and overflow from, additional parallel channels which are visible here as earthworks. The water would eventually drain away from the water meadow system, and it is likely in this case that is drained directly back into the stream that it had come from.

<2> Last, J., Carpenter, E. + Evans, S., 2016, West Wiltshire National Archaeological Identification Survey Lowland Pilot Project Report (Report). SWI27877.

Slight earthwork remains visible on lidar were interpreted as a possible post-medieval catchwork water meadow. At the northern extent of the earthworks is a flood dyke, from which water could have overflowed downslope to the north-west and drained into additional parallel channels before returning back into the stream it had come from.

The earthwork remains of medieval or post medieval ridge and furrow with possible field boundaries and plough headlands are visible on lidar. These are situated to the west of Lower Selves Wood. Within one of the fields is a boundary ditch with ridge and furrow on either side. Part of the ditch is plough levelled, and at this point it appears to be flanked by a bank boundary on one side, and a plough headland on the other. The ditch appears to continue into adjacent fields where the banks are no longer present, although in some places, small banks on the northern side of the ditch may represent spoil from its construction. The ditch continues south although no associated ridge and furrow is visible in the available sources.

A number of contiguous fields of probable medieval or post medieval ridge and furrow cultivation visible as earthworks on lidar images. Within the cultivated fields are the traces of a number of plough headlands, post medieval field boundaries. An area of extraction or quarrying can be seen cutting into one part of the rig. The slight earthwork traces of an earlier linear bank can be seen extending northwards from beneath the rig in the north-western section of the medieval cultivation. The slight earthwork remains of a possible medieval settlement can be seen between the northern extent of the ridge and furrow and a stream which flows into the River Avon just to the north-west of the site.

The slight earthwork remains of a possible medieval or post medieval settlement seen adjacent to a stream, immediately to the north of an area of medieval or later ridge and furrow cultivation. The settlement is visible on lidar images and appears as at least two large rectilinear enclosed areas, a possible hollow way and traces of further ditches and internal sub-divisions. The adjacent stream flows meeting the River Avon just north of the western corner of the ridge and furrow cultivation.

The earthwork remains of a medieval field system of strip fields running down to the banks of the River Avon to the east of Beanacre which can be seen on lidar images. Two of the boundaries survive as hedge lines, three further former boundaries can be seen as banks and ditches defining four adjacent fields, each of approximately of 290 metres x 40 metres. East of these regular strips are further boundary remains, though not arranged in the same parallel fashion.

Four small associated military camps are visible as structures, buildings and earthworks on air photographs. The camps comprise military buildings, military roads, air raid shelters and emergency water supply tanks, and are outliers to the main site of RAF Melksham 650 metres to the east. A small firing and grenade range to the immediate west is probably also associated. The demolished foundations of a handful of buildings and one upstanding building are visible on the latest 2008 and 2009 vertical photography. Additionally the internal concrete structures of two air raid shelters, with the earthwork mound removed are also extant.

Post medieval ridge and furrow, some of which is narrow, is visible as earthworks on air photographs north of Berryfield. Most appears to be no longer extant on the latest 2008 vertical photography.

<2> Salmon, F., 2018, Land off Semington Road, Melksham, Wiltshire (Report). SWI28164.

A survey identified a number of anomalies of probable and possible archaeological origin. Despite the weak signal of many of these anomalies and intersecting ploughing trends, a coherent area of linear responses and pits has been identified, which may indicate an early agricultural function or settlement fringe. The archaeological responses are concentrated in the southern half of site. The responses in the northern half of site are more ambiguous and subtle in nature and have therefore been classified as 'Undetermined'. These may possibly represent a continuation of the features to the south or be resultant from natural or agricultural processes.

A post medieval settlement with probable medieval origins is visible as earthworks on air photographs and lidar. The settlement comprises a number of networked hollow ways and a building platform. Another building is illustrated on the early edition Ordnance Survey maps. The orientation of the primary hollow ways, from south-west to north-east, aligns with the road leading from Soho Farm, bisected by the railway, suggesting this might have been a continuous settlement prior to the railway. Medieval ridge and furrow is part truncated by and partly abuts settlement features. Most elements appear to be no longer extant on the latest 2005 lidar and 2009 vertical photography.

Medieval settlement and associated field boundaries and ridge and furrow are visible as earthworks on air photographs. The settlement is immediately north of Melksham Park Farm and comprises hollow ways, field boundaries and at least two probable building platforms. The field boundaries and ridge and furrow extend west towards Newton Farm, which is the site of the medieval settlement of Neuton, with which these features are probably associated. Most of the features appear to be no longer extant on the latest 2008 vertical photography.

Medieval settlement reorganisation, perhaps associated with disafforestation of the area.

Extensive medieval ridge and furrow and associated field boundaries and plough headlands are visible as earthworks on air photographs and lidar to the east of The Spa. Most elements are extant on the latest 2005 lidar and 2008 vertical photography. One plot of ridge and furrow overlies the corner of a large enclosure of possible later prehistoric or Roman date. A linear boundary within the ridge and furrow to the north-west is aligned on the enclosure and may be associated, and then incorporated into the medieval field system at a later date.

<1> Environment Agency, 2005, Lidar, LIDAR ST9262 DSM 02-16-APR-2005 (Aerial Photograph). SWI26451. A large enclosure of possible later prehistoric and/or Roman date is visible as a shallow earthwork on 2005 lidar. The enclosure is defined by a sinuous bank which has been partly truncated by a field boundary and ridge and furrow of medieval field systems. The enclosure has maximum internal dimensions measuring 167 metres by 127 metres. It is possible that the enclosure might date to an earlier medieval period.

<2> Last, J., Carpenter, E. + Evans, S., 2016, West Wiltshire National Archaeological Identification Survey Lowland Pilot Project Report (Report). SWI27877.

A large D-shaped enclosure with dimensions of c 150 x 110m was identified on lidar as a low earthwork in an area of piecemeal enclosure near Loves Farm, south-east of Melksham. However, no corresponding sub-surface features were noted when this location was subject to development-led evaluation (geophysical survey and trial trenching), although a cluster of features probably indicative of a small Roman farmstead was found just to the north. The earthwork is therefore probably more likely to represent more recent field boundaries.

A complex of medieval field boundaries, probably indicative of the settlement of Beanacre, and associated ridge and furrow are visible as earthworks on air photographs and lidar. Most of the earthworks are located on the east side of the present village, with a wider field system extending to the south, which has been recorded separately. A small number of earthworks are located immediately south of Beanacre Manor. Most elements are extant on the latest 2005 lidar and 2009 vertical photography.

The 20th century/Second World War Beanacre Sidings are visible on aerial photographs taken in 1945. These sidings were situated to the west of Beanacre. The sidings consisted of a road leading off Westlands Lane to the west of the railway line. There were a number of buildings at the site, particularly at the northern end and two large buildings further south. Access across the sidings was provided by footbridge. Two pillboxes and curving lines of barbed wire were built either side of the footbridge and two further pillboxes possibly associated with the defence of these sidings were to the north. Construction of Beanacre Sidings commenced in late 1938 and was built to serve Ridge and Eastlays underground ammunition depots. Some buildings were built on the site in late 1941 as part of an RAF component store, though this was never completed; these may be the buildings seen at the northern end of the site. The sidings saw reduced usage after the war and the railway facilities removed in 1948. Air photos taken in 2009 show the remains of the hard standing and one building. Only one pillbox can be seen the remainder are hidden by trees or have been demolished.

<2> English Heritage, NMR Aerial Photograph, Next Perspectives PGA Imagery ST8966 23-MAY-2009 (Aerial Photograph). SWI9475.

<3> Last, J., Carpenter, E. + Evans, S., 2016, West Wiltshire National Archaeological Identification Survey Lowland Pilot Project Report (Report). SWI27877.

Buildings associated with the main quarries, as well as a dispersed band of additional surface works associated with smaller quarries that were requisitioned for use as wartime storage, were interconnected partly through the existing lanes but also via a network of roads built by the armed forces which in places followed the line of the earlier quarry tramways. Connection with the wider rail network was provided by sidings at Beanacre (pre-WW2), defended with pillboxes.

The earthworks of medieval or post medieval ridge and furrow, hollow way and field boundaries can be seen on air photos and lidar. The ridge and furrow with headland bank on the southern side is situated on the western edge of Whitley next to Whitley Farm. Earthworks running along the southern side of this are the remains of a possible hollow way. Air photos taken in 1946 show a two earthworks to the south east. The nearest was probably a continuation of the hollow way, the most easterly either also a hollow way or a field boundary ditch. Another short field boundary bank is to the south.

A settlement of unknown date was identified by a geophysical survey.

<2> Hughes, V., 2014, Land East of Spa Road, Melksham, Wiltshire (Report). SWI26783.
During the evaluation, five trenches revealed significant archaeological features, all concentrated in a field to the south-east of Bowerhill Lodge. All of the significant features identified appear to be of Roman date. Their location corresponds closely with a complex of enclosures previously detected by geophysical survey. The overall layout appears to be an organised rectilinear plan, with at least two phases of ditched enclosure, with an entrance track to the south and possible building plots in the middle. The excavated features include a series of enclosure ditches and pits, with slight evidence for stone structural elements or surfaces coinciding with the possibly building plots. The associated pottery assemblage was quite large, given the very limited extent of the investigation, and indicated that the site was occupied in the 2nd and 3rd centuries AD. The settlement does not appear to have been occupied beyond c. 300 AD and appears to have been relatively low status.

<3> Last, J., Carpenter, E. + Evans, S., 2016, West Wiltshire National Archaeological Identification Survey Lowland Pilot Project Report (Report). SWI27877.
Geophysical survey and trial-trench evaluation located a rectilinear ditched enclosure measuring c 70 x 120m, with associated small paddocks or fields; the pottery indicated occupation during the 2nd and 3rd centuries AD.

In Area 2A, a V shaped ditch had been cut into a natural linear feature, possibly linking with more boundary ditches extending to the north under existing properties. It contained a mixture of 11th-13th and 16th-18th century pottery. A circular pit lay to the north of the feature, and contained charcoal, animal bone and some 11th and 13th pottery. An adjacent evaluation trench had also revealed a stone wall and cobbled surface.

<1> Hardy, A. + Dingworth, D., 2014, A medieval iron production site at Little Snarlton Farm, East Melksham, Wiltshire: excavations in 2010 (Article in serial). SWI27206.

Areas 2B & 2C contained shallow pits and gullies, one of which contained a significant assemblage of 12th-13th century pottery, animal bone and some fired clay. An industrial working area of large and irregular shallow pits, a posthole and a shallow gully contained slag, tap slag, vitrified clay and charcoal, and some 12th-13th century pottery. The remains of a limestone platform was also in the area. A large oblong pit had been lined with stone and clay, and had been filled with a succession of dumps of burnt clay, charcoal and sand. The oak charcoal was radio-carbon dated to the 8th-19th century AD. Other remains of such working floors and smithing hearth bottoms were distributed across the site, as were smaller deposits of slag and pottery.

A building of an Early Roman date was found by an excavation.

<2> Mason, C., 2018, A Romano-British Roadside Settlement at Beanacre, Wiltshire (Monograph). SWI28334.
A small, sunken-featured rectangular structure, defined by beam slots and postholes ranged around a sunken area. The building appears to have had two phases of construction and finds from the basal fill of the sunken area include samian ware dated AD 60-120 whilst finds from the second phase of the building include samian ware dated AD 50-110. Charred plant remains from the first phase of the building were very rich in hulled wheat and barley grains, many of which were germinated. This could indicate that the building was used for crop processing or possibly brewing, or that those types of activity were occurring nearby. Two intercutting postholes/pits and two neonate burials lay in the north corner of the building. A substantial quantity of pottery, mostly derived from a single large storage jar, was recovered from the base of pit 1299. The more closely datable sherds were early Roman and therefore broadly contemporary with Building 1.

<2> Mason, C., 2018, A Romano-British Roadside Settlement at Beanacre, Wiltshire (Monograph). SWI28334.
During the mid Romano-British period, two new foci of activity developed. One lay within a north-east to south-west aligned strip across the southern end of the site and the other covered a 40m wide, north-west to south-east aligned band towards the northern end of the site. Both areas were defined by substantial enclosure ditches.
One of the most characteristic features of the Beanacre site was the profusion of ovens, 41 in total, and all but two of which appear to date from the mid Romano-British period. Most of the ovens were clustered in two distinct areas and were keyhole or hourglass-shaped. They comprised a sunken hearth linked to an ash rake-out pit via a short flue. Analysis of environmental samples from the ovens and their associated rake-out pits produced a relatively rich assemblage of charred plant remains, charcoal and burnt pig bones, which suggests mixed uses including cooking but also possibly malting.
A small number of mid Romano-British pits were recorded across the site. Most were fairly shallow sub-circular or amorphous features of indeterminate function.

Part of a settlement, including ditches, pits and ovens, of a Late Romano-British date was found by an excavation.

<2> Last, J., Carpenter, E. + Evans, S., 2016, West Wiltshire National Archaeological Identification Survey Lowland Pilot Project Report (Report). SWI27877.
The recent discovery of Roman settlement remains close to the Roman road. It is unclear whether this is the site of a number of Roman coin finds from Lacock.

<3> Mason, C., 2018, A Romano-British Roadside Settlement at Beanacre, Wiltshire (Monograph). SWI28334.
The spatial distribution of late Romano-British features suggests that most of the boundaries that were established in the mid Romano-British period were still extant in the 4th century. By this date, most of the ditches appear to have been allowed to silt up. Further new ditches were laid out. A small number of pits of late Romano-British date were recorded across all three areas of the site, most of which were shallow sub-circular or amorphous features of indeterminate function. Among these features were a series of shallow pits and possible natural hollows along the south eastern edge of Area 1A, which were infilled with charcoal-rich soils that contained a large assemblage of burnt pig bones and a moderate quantity of late Romano-British pottery. Given the proximity of the features to a number of mid Romano-British ovens, it seems possible that the bones represent incinerated food waste from the latter.

A building of a Late Romano-British date was found by an excavation.

<2> Mason, C., 2018, A Romano-British Roadside Settlement at Beanacre, Wiltshire (Monograph). SWI28334.
Building 2, situated immediately to the south of the main Roman road in Area 1B, had at least two phases of construction and is late 2nd-3rd century AD or later in date. The earliest part of Building 2 was a rectangular structure, divided into two rooms by an east-west partition with north-south internal dimensions. No contemporary floor surfaces survived and most of the wall foundations had been systematically robbed. The depth of the foundations suggests that the building probably had a second storey.

BARROW CEMETERY (Bronze Age - 2350 BC to 701 BC)

Description and Sources

Description - None recorded

<1> Last, J., Carpenter, E. + Evans, S., 2016, West Wiltshire National Archaeological Identification Survey Lowland Pilot Project Report (Report). SWI27877.

This cemetery, in an area of recent field amalgamation, probably comprises the remains of seven levelled round barrows (several of the ring-ditches are penannular or incomplete) between 250m and 450m from the Avon, though the river appears to have been straightened here. Recent oblique photographs reveal that the site extends further north and east than was previously known. The barrows are overlain by extant ridge and furrow, meaning there is good potential for the survival of sub-surface features and also the possibility that geophysical survey could reveal additional components of the barrow cemetery; a recent survey around 100m to the east of the cemetery revealed no further ring-ditches but did find a rectilinear boundary or enclosure ditch and a possible pit alignment.

<2> Environment Agency, 2005, Lidar, LIDAR ST8867 DSM 02-16-APR-2005 (Aerial Photograph). SWI26451.

The slight earthworks of medieval or post medieval ridge and furrow and post medieval field boundaries situated to the south of Chapel Knapp can be seen on lidar taken in 2005. A number of trees depicted on the 1886 Ordnance Survey map follow the line of some of these earthworks. Some of these earthworks preserve elements of the reverse-S ploughing, as do surviving field boundaries to the east.

<3> Last, J., Carpenter, E. + Evans, S., 2016, West Wiltshire National Archaeological Identification Survey Lowland Pilot Project Report (Report). SWI27877.

Alignments of the current field boundaries describe reverse-S patterns that extend for 800m north from the Roman road which marks the southern edge of the parish. Slight earthworks of former field banks run parallel to these boundaries and some slight ridge and furrow, which when combined with the surviving field boundaries extend the total length by 100m. These field boundaries have previously been interpreted as the remains of a Roman field system, their 'wavy brickwork' plan perhaps the legacy of a coaxial landscape. Alternatively the Roman road, which was later utilised as a parish and hundred boundary, may have served as a baseline for early medieval rearrangement and these features may be evidence of 'long lands', individual strips seen in Yorkshire and the Midlands which in some cases run for up to 2000m. These are thought to represent the earliest stage in the rearrangement of the countryside into open fields that took place around the end of the C10.

Description - None recorded

<1> Powell, A.B., 2018, Romano-British edge-of-settlement activity and landscape organisation, north of Bath Road, Melksham (Article in serial). SWI28448.

A group of six ovens, three bounded by the gullies, and three to the north, all with charcoal-rich deposits in their bases. The overlying layers contained fired clay fragments/sherds, but the ovens appear to have operated at relatively low temperatures, possibly for drying corn or something similar.
